The Sydney Morning Herald

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1886.

THE elections in the sister colony of Tasmania are now over, and the return of members has proved, we believe, entirely unfavourable to the policy of the present Ministry. We may expect, therefore, that our next notice will show a change. The names of the persons returned embrace a considerable proportion who were formerly in the administration of affairs; more who, for the most part, have a great stake the country which they are called to govern. They hold a position in public esteem which is not the less maintainable because with liberal political principles they have a respect for democracy and morality. There must be seen-saw in all colonies,—one set up another down. Occasionally the people seem to be governed by a sudden popular prejudice, or aspirations which are founded upon the egotism of a class. When a party has done its work, it is not unlikely that it will fall by its very success, and that the instruments which it has provided for its antagonists will become the means of its own destruction.

The question in Tasmania, as here, is generally mixed up with the financial situation of the Treasury. Every year increases the expense without increasing the revenue upon the old system of collection. The people complain of new burdens, the incidence of which each class of politicians is desirous of changing. Fiscal questions here assume a very important phase, because they are liable to be dealt with, not upon the general interests of the community considered at large, but the indirect and unwarmed effects. To lay on taxes for the purpose of preventing tax being gathered, is one of the absurdities of the protection system. A heavy duty is imposed in order that the goods upon which it falls may cease to be imported—that is to say, a heavy tax is levied professedly to meet the public expenses without the avowed hope of those who impose that it may be unproductive. If it should totally fail of revenue the triumph of it advocates will be complete. We have no doubt whatever that if free trade could be obtained by the Tasmanian colonists the advantages they possess of climate and port would advance their general prosperity. But of course the question whether the burdens of government are to be transferred to the accumulated property of the country, or to be collected at the ports, is one of great importance and delicacy, and no man in his senses would surrender property or income to an Assembly unless guarantees were first taken that property should have a fair influence in the disposition of the money paid. But: there seems to be in it some Tasmanian another reason against these direct taxes for general purposes. The total amount annually which it is possible to raise by such methods is comparatively small. The machinery necessary for it necessarily be great. Consequently the objection itself would not be gained, so far as revenue is concerned, by this change of the fiscal system. There is no plan by which revenue can be raised so easily as upon the great articles of general consumption delivered at a few ports incapable of evading the duties, and distributed without any charge to the Government itself. To abolish such a system, unless after the most careful consideration of consequences, would not be an act of prudence or equity.

What strikes us in the survey of all these affairs of Tasmania—its indebtedness, the insufficiency of its revenue, and the large cost to its central Government—is that the relief must be sought in a more perfect municipal organization of the people. This is the only way in which burdens can be imposed and borne with cheerfulness or progress made without sense of oppression. The central Government ought to have indeed great power in this respect to come in and see that the thing is done, and to regulate the manner of doing it, so that no little town locality shall be able to play fantastic tricks and by the temporary ascendancy of a few persons be guilty of oppression. There ought to be a power to connect together municipalities for all general purposes, and to render them tributary in proportion to their taxtion and position, to the promotion of the general good. But the more the local Board have the spending of their own money the more will the weight of the central Government be diminished and its difficulties with the Treasury removed.

It would be a great error to suppose that affairs in Tasmania will be mended by the multiplication of its legislators. It is a small colony but it is sufficiently large for a small assembly. A larger body of men assembling for deliberation would be desirable if there were other considerations. Already the community can only spare a very small number of its inhabitants well qualified to occupy a position which requires months of attendance, and which there is no pay. The limitation

I hope that the Irish vote may be used to prevent the American Executive from acting in a similar way again, and that the British, if they are not really prepared to make a sacrifice. The American Government could not do less than it did. It is a disregard of international obligations. The anticipated raid may never come off.

This result speaks well for the manufacture, and shows how sound was the judgment of those who, in consequence of the failure of the first cable, ordered three more. Thus, out of three cables that were laid across the Atlantic, two are now in use. The first was probably the last construction ever to be made available.

reports an inquest, held the day before, by the coroner, at the Dundasfield estate, on the body of John Brien, aged twenty-five years. Brien, it appeared, had been a labourer for Mr. Ede's employment for about five weeks, attending regularly to his work, and showing no signs of illness. On Thursday morning he went to work as usual before breakfast, and after returning to the hut washed some of his clothes in the creek, and made himself some tea, which he took heartily. After breakfast, the other man who lived with him, left him alone in the hut, about 9 o'clock. At dinner time he was found dead, hanging to one of the rafters by a rope used to suspend a bag of flour out of the way of the mice. Near him was a stool and a black box, which he might have thrown himself off. This was reported at once, but he was allowed to hang until a considerable time had elapsed, when he was taken down, and placed in a coffin, and buried in the cemetery. On the body were found a Catholic prayer-book, and a letter written by a Mrs. O'Brien, Woolloomooloo. A verdict of foul-play was returned.MERCANTILE AND MONEY MARKET.THE CUSTOMS REVENUE RECEIVED TO-DATE IS AS

COUGHS AND COLDS—Instant relief, in the most distressing cases, is obtained by taking the PETROLEUM OIL of CARBON. In most cases a single bottle will effect a cure. Prepared by Dr. J. W. WATTS, 10, Pitt-street, Sydney.

THE BEST REMEDY FOR INDIGESTION—NUSTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS are constantly recommended as a simple but certain remedy for indigestion. They are a powerful tonic and gentle aperient; are sold in their original form, and under many circumstances; and the thousands of persons can bear testimony to the benefits derived from their use.

HARTLEY KEROSENE OIL—The undersigned invite the attention of Consumers and the Trade to the quality of the ILLUMINATING OIL now produced from the works of the HARTLEY KEROSENE OIL and PARAFFINE COMPANY (Limited), which they are prepared to supply for home consumption, or for exportation, in any quantity. Not only is it unexcelled by the very best imported oils, but the best American oils, the following reasons:—

1. It will give a better and lighter light.
2. It will burn considerably longer.
3. It is free from smoke, and is perfectly free from all danger, which the American oils are not.
4. It is a great saving from the disagreeable smell attendant upon the use of the latter.

A PROVIDENCE has arisen against "Colonial" Kerosene Oil, in consequence of a very inferior article being sold under the name; it is, therefore, necessary that the purchaser should be satisfied that the oil he obtains is the genuine "Hartley" Oil.

For this purpose, a TRADE MARK has been adopted, and the oil is sold in tins, each of which bears the name of the company, and the name of the agent, and any party forging it will be guilty of a misdemeanor. The company would, therefore, feel particularly anxious to see that the oil they are supplied with is the genuine "Hartley" Oil, and that it is sold in tins, each of which bears the name of the company, and the name of the agent, and any party forging it will be guilty of a misdemeanor.
